rf labels are not reusable after deactivation since capacitors are destroyed by a strong electromagnetic field at the resonant frequency. em labels are reusable which can be deactivated and reactivated by deactivator and activator. am labels can be deactivated and activated. but reactivation of am labels has to be made by special equipment with adequate magnetic field to guarantee acceptable performance. when goods are checked out, labels will be deactivated by deactivators. in libraries, em labels will be reactivated when books or other items are returned or checked in.

same as hard tags, selection of labels also depends on many factors.

1 – operational principle of system

- 2 – performance of system – decided by system design and levels of noises from the environment and the power source
- 3 – width of detection aisle of system
- 4 – items to be protected
- 5 – expected performance of the detection by the customer
- 6 – customer ' s preference on the appearance
- 7 – cost
