

??DHL??|??DHL????|??DHL?????“We are proud to have the diversity that we value so deeply in the DHL culture recognized by Great Place to Work and Fortune,” said Greg Hewitt, CEO, DHL Express U.S. “As a global company operating in more than 220 countries and territories, we embrace the diversity of our employees and recognize it for the genuine strength that it is. Our organization brings together people from a wide range of cultural backgrounds, all with different skills, experiences and viewpoints. Quite frankly, I can’t imagine how DHL would be anywhere near as successful a company as we are without our diverse workforce.”

Among the employee groups that DHL has engaged in the past few years are veterans, resulting in a 30 percent increase in veteran hires since 2016. DHL also supports initiatives that involve veterans, including annual holiday gift deliveries to military personnel serving overseas.

DHL also holds an annual Diversity Week every July, inviting employees to celebrate their cultural diversity by dressing in native attire and sharing international foods with colleagues. Small touches are also meaningful: employee cubicles sport the flag year round of the person’s country of origin.

Additionally, DHL emphasizes the value it places on diversity in its recruitment efforts. This year the Company participated in the Diversity and Inclusion Career Conference at the University of Georgia as well as career fair partnerships with HBCU schools (historically black colleges and universities). DHL also took part in Women Empowerment Day at the University of Cincinnati and held several Women in Sales presentations there; the company’s major U.S. hub is located at the Cincinnati/Northern Kentucky International Airport. Additionally, DHL was part of the Diversity Career Fair at Michigan State University.

“The 2018 Best Workplaces for Diversity are at the forefront of creating workplaces that are better for business and better for their people,” said Michael C. Bush, CEO of Great Place to Work. “These workplaces not only pay attention to how diverse their workforce and management teams are, but close critical gaps in how all their people are treated and developed day-to-day.”
