Nasdaq Big Screen is an ideal advertising platform because it is located in Manhattan's Times Square, a world-famous tourist destination that attracts millions of tourists and citizens every year. Here's a breakdown of how to advertise on Nasdaq's big screen: Types of ads: Nasdaq Big Screen ads support a variety of types of ads, including image ads, video ads, animated ads, and more. The content of advertisements should conform to local laws and ethics, and should not involve politics or violate morals and ethics. AD duration: AD duration can be customized, usually ranging from a few seconds to a few minutes. Advertising costs: Advertising costs vary according to the length and placement of the AD. They are usually expensive, but can also bring high exposure and returns to the brand. AD placement: Nasdaq screens can place ads in different locations, such as the top, bottom, center, left or right side of the screen. AD placement time: The AD placement time can be customized, either throughout the day or only during certain periods, such as morning, afternoon, or evening. Advertising production requirements: Advertising production should meet the requirements of large screen resolution and size, production personnel should have relevant skills and experience. Advertising Review: All advertisements are subject to review and approval by NASDAQ prior to placement to ensure that the content of advertisements complies with relevant regulations and NASDAQ's code of ethics and ethics. Nasdaq big screen advertising is a very effective marketing strategy that allows brands to gain high exposure and awareness around the world. At the same time, advertising also requires brands to invest enough energy and funds to ensure the quality of advertising production and delivery, so as to obtain better results.
