FedEx Corp. (New York Stock Code: FDX) announced today that FedEx Ground has officially started providing FedEx door-to-door packages to the majority of the US population on Sunday, driving the transformation of one of the courier companies. Global transportation network to better serve the rapidly growing e-commerce market.

FedEx President and Operations Officer Raj Subramaniam said, "Now that FedEx Ground delivers FedEx door-to-door packages to most residential properties in the United States on Sunday, we have greatly improved our speed advantage to start a new year." "This provides added value for e-commerce shippers across the United States and 188 million online shoppers in 7700 towns, with FedEx delivering door-to-door packages on Sundays. As more and more customers look forward to weekend deliveries, this enhancement of our network means that every day is now FedEx delivery day."

Sunday delivery of residential packages can accelerate the transportation speed of most routes by one or two days, which is particularly valuable for shippers and consumers of healthcare and perishable goods. FedEx Ground has reached more locations faster than UPS Ground.

During the recent peak holiday season, FedEx Ground began delivering residential packages on Sundays.

Subramaniam added, "In past peak seasons, delivering 7 days a week was crucial to our success, as we experienced some of the busiest days in company history, including shipping nearly 38 million packages on Cyber Monday alone."
