Since the take-over of the company by Bernd Munstermann in 1978 – now in its fifth generation -, Mnstermann has become one of the leading companies in the field of plant engineering world-wide. It is especially in the last decade with the growth of globalisation that the company has developed into an efficient and globally-operating industrial business. The key functions of M ü nstermann lie in the design, development and production of specialist facilities for a wide array of applications and industrial segments. From the start the emphasis of production has been on drying plants, such as for example, drying conveyors, continuous-flow driers and chamber drying ovens. Having taken over the production of material-handling and de-dusting systems, it has been possible for M ü nstermann to position itself as a complete supplier of drying and heat-treatment units including their ancillary conveyor and filter technologies currently available in the market. In order to offer and provide the integrated solutions to individual problems, M ü nstermann falls back on the most modern engineering and production methods as well as the traditional manual production processes.
